The Responsibility to Protect, commonly abbreviated as R2P, was first mentioned in the report of the International Commission on Intervention and State Sovereignty (ICISS) in 2001 and adopted in the World Summit Outcome Document by the United Nations General Assembly in 2005. Accordingly, states and the international community are obliged to be responsible for protecting its citizens from four crimes – genocide, war crimes, ethnic cleansing, and crimes against humanity. The first R2P-related case in Southeast Asia can be found in the post-Cyclone Nargis situation. The book discusses the question why a natural disaster compelled the application of R2P even though it is initially not a R2P-type crime.

In order to show the normative grounds for the evolution of R2P in ASEAN, the book adopts the theory of Norm Localization which points out the conditions for a new norm to be accepted and developed in the local context. The congruence between the external norm of R2P and the regional practice of human rights protection and promotion will be clearly shown.

The book also attempts to explain the impacts of R2P concept on ASEAN in dealing with the human insecurity after the Cyclone Nargis happened in Myanmar in 2008. Under international pressure of possible military intervention in the name of R2P, the norm entrepreneur played a vital role in negotiating to bridge the junta and the international community and facilitate humanitarian assistance. The successful localization of R2P by ASEAN in its effort to handle this man-made catastrophe has implications on ASEAN's institutional changes when it comes to human rights protection in future.

Africa's experience with constitutionalism has not been a happy one in the 50 years since most of the Sub-Saharan countries became independent. The great enthusiasm of the early 1960's that greeted new constitutions providing for democracy, the rule of law, and guarantees of human rights has in many places been dashed by military coups, emergency decrees, suspension of constitutional guarantees, and autocratic, abusive rule. This timely book by Mwelekeo wa NGO (MWENGO) - a regional reflection and learning center for civil society organizations offers important contributions by eminent scholars and activists on the importance of involving Civil Society in the establishment of genuine constitutionalism on the African continent. The book provides some of the principal issues that arise in the establishment of constitutionalism in Africa. This book will be of great interest to all working on issues pertaining to constitutionalism-

"This work is about factors that seem to affect the role of judiciary in Pakistan's governance. It mainly focuses on prerogative writ jurisdictions of high courts and original jurisdiction of Supreme Court to enforce fundamental rights and to provide adequate remedies against the ultra vires public actions. It attempts to locate reasons which hinder judiciary to ensure rule of law for good governance, tending to restrict judicial review to effectively review public policies and actions. The study discusses in some details that governments both democratic and non-democratic, have been conscious and often tried to counter the power of judicial review through amendments in constitutional history of the country."

This book is the outcome of a doctoral study of the judicial interpretation of the constitutions in selected Commonwealth jurisdictions, and a survey of the theories of constitutional interpretation and adjudication, the rules applied by the courts in the interpretation of the provisions of the constitutions, and determined the extent to which the existing approaches to the interpretation of the constitution have hindered the development of constitutional jurisprudence in those countries.

In all, the statutes and constitutions are expressed in English language and some words are prone to distortions, thereby requiring the need for the courts to discover the intention of the legislators when interpreting such statutes and constitutions. It is further observed that the theories and rules of interpretation currently adopted by the courts are conflicting, and this is partly due to vagueness and also that in many cases, where a rule appears to support a particular interpretation, there is another rule, often of equal status, which can be invoked in favour of an interpretation which could lead to different result. The general conclusion is that the existing approaches to constitutional interpretation are somewhat inefficient and inadequate to enable the courts to effectively discover the intention of the legislators, and therefore the courts should be allowed to examine all relevant parliamentary documents and debates.

This book is an in-depth study and analysis of the concept of standardization and quality regulation and quality regulation as a legal instrument for the development of Africa. It shows how standardization facilitates trade and economic integration into the global economy as well as the protection of African consumers. The book discloses that whilst standardization is pivotal to the sustainable economic growth of Africa, law and legislation are crucial in driving standardization and quality regulation trends on the African continent. The work advocates for a coherent and dynamic legal framework for standardization and regulatory activities in Africa with a view to harmonizing common rules, regulations, and practices that could facilitate cooperation and coordination of trade-related economic activities.

In 2017, Malaysia sprang a surprise on Singapore by filing two applications for revision and interpretation of the International Court of Justice's judgment of 2008, which awarded Singapore sovereignty over the island of Pedra Branca. However, just two weeks before the scheduled oral hearings for the cases, the newly-elected Malaysian Prime Minister Dr Mahathir Mohamad decided to discontinue the cases. This book explains succinctly the arguments of both countries. The authors recount how the Singapore team prepared for the written pleadings and oral hearings for both cases. They also reveal interesting behind the scenes accounts of these "unheard cases". This book will be of great interest to both non-lawyers and lawyers, as well as students who are interested in international law, international relations and territorial disputes, and in how countries which are parties to a case before an international tribunal embark on their preparations.

Law On Prevention And Detection Of Crimes By The Police In Nigeria is a doctrinaire research which was successfully undertaken by the author at the Faculty of Law of Ambrose Alli University, Ekpoma, Edo State. Expectedly, the treatise has a robust research base on which the superstructure of the legal and legislative epistemology regarding prevention and detection of crimes by the Nigeria Police is established. And, this is identifiable from the beginning of the book to its very conclusion, which, as the author remarks, draws information from both primary and secondary sources.

This work attempts to discuss the rights of the child in Islam to caring, fostering and suckling. The work also highlights child's rights to be loved, right to life, health and education. Some other rights of the child such as the right to play, recreational activities, privacy, and decision making and respecting their views are also discussed in detail. The book describes rights of all children including orphans, step children and illegitimate children; In addition, the book presents duties of children towards their parents and parents towards their children under Islamic law. It depicts a comprehensive picture of some other aspects relating to child's right such as relations between children and their peers and impacts of neglecting child. The work also addresses the question whether there is any basis under Islamic law for female genital mutilation or FGM. It also takes into account several questions such as; what are the principles of Islamic law for child rearing; how should parents be responsible and accountable for ignoring their children; what is the role of the state in child protection; and what are the duties of a Muslim state in child protection?
