[The Algebra of the Weaving Patterns, Gong Music and Kinship System of the Kankana-ey of Mountain Province is a pioneering study on Philippine ethnomathematics, or the mathematics of a people’s culture and Community life. Focusing on certain features of the indigenous ways of the Kankana-ey of Cordillera, the study shows that mathematics is concretely embedded and operative in a people’s Culture. This has deep and far-reaching implications on three fronts: on our mathematical and pedagogical knowledge, on making such knowledge more accessible and relevant to the People, and on developing more responsive mathematics curricula in formal and non-formal education.]

[Philippine Palaeography is a comprehensive connected account of the historic-palaeographic development of ancient Philippine Scripts. It presents the various theories of the Origin and development of these scripts. It recognizes the relevance of the scripts in the context of the homogeneity of Philippine culture as well as their relation to the larger Southeast Asian culture. The book includes an extensive discussion of the palaeographic relations between Philippine scripts and the ancient systems of writing of other Southeast Asian Countries and India. It also presents the problems encountered in the early attempts to use the scripts in Hispanizing the Filipino. Most important, the author presents a new theory on the extra-Philippine relations of the scripts, one which appears valid in terms of what the author seen as] the convergence of “basic form-stokers” between these scripts and those of Northern and Central Sumatre.]

[This Study is the culmination of efforts in involving many years to know the origin of the ancestors of the Filipino people and understand the development of their culture and prehistory. It could not have been written without the initial impetus that Jose Rizal gave to Philippineasian Studies. In spite of an intellectual contact with Renward Brandstetter, one of the giants of Austronesian linguistic who classified Tagalog as belonging to the Subfamily Indoesain, Rizal had the knowledge that this language was not a derivative of Malay which then was being used as a component in the coined name Malayo-Polynesian, the earlier term used for the super-family of language now being replaced by Austronesian which is a non-value-oriented name. In spite of this personal opinion, linguists, Filipinos and foreigners alike, never paid attention to its veracity and truth.]

Watching the Watchdog : Media Self-Regulation in South East Asia / Edited by Cecile C.A. Balgos
Bangkok : Southeast Asian Press Alliance, c2002
x, 170 p.; 21cm
974-91047-0-6
$ 15.00

[Watching the Watchdog offers the experiences of various media self-regulatory bodies in Southeast Asia, focusing on how they are coping with what recent political and economic changes have wrought on the region’s journalism in general and on press freedom in particular. The articles in this book are based on papers presented at a conference held in Bangkok in September 2002 that was organized by the Southeast Asian press Alliance (SEAPA), the Press council of Thailand and the Thai Journalists Association, with the support of the Friedrich Ebert Stiftung.
The Pieces show how media organizations across the region are addressing the challenges before them, and while many admit having difficulties, all agree that regulation is a small price to pay to protect a free press.]

The East Asian Crisis And Employment : The Gender Dimension / Joseph Y. Lim
Quezon City : Philippine Center for Policy Studies, c2000
ix, 75 p.; 23cm
971-8655-10-7
$ 6.00

[The Philippines is a good case to discuss boom-bust cycles and their gender dimensions. In times of boom, men increase their employment at the same time that real wages and labor productivity increase or decline less rapidly. Women may or may not benefit as much from this boom. In times of bust, when real wages and productivity decline more rapidly, women expand their labor force participation and increase their work hours while the men are displaced. In the long run, this contributes to widening the disparities in earning and labor productivity between sexes.

It is imperative than an alternative development strategy be adopted. Industrialization employing better technology and more skilled workers should be the aim in order to absorb the growing educated labor force in rural and urban areas and to stem the outward migration of the population, particularly of women. By concentrating on rural development and rural – urban linkages, economic development and in the end more sustainable.

An alternative development strategy, however, should not be confined to the economic sphere alone. There is a need to directly address stereotyped gender roles in the home. Because women have traditionally done most of the housework, the increased dependency burden (due to an increase in unemployment family members and relatives) puts more pressure on women just when they are asked to increase their participation in labour markets. That women become domestics and ‘entertainers’ in both domestic and foreign markets during both good and bad times again indicates the need to expand the struggle beyond the economic.

[Mind Link is part of our effort to develop closer ties with industry, a key item in our UP Modernization plan. If I may state the objectives of this plan in two Phrases, it is to catch up with the other universities in Asia and to place our country in a stronger competitive position in the new global order, especially in the field of Information Technology. The Mind Link gathering brought together technology practitioners from the University and the private sector. In each of the three meetings, the academics presented their capabilities and research results, while the industry representatives discussed available products and services in the market (Local and global) and the problems they encounter in their business. The question we would like to address at this point is, what now? Given the present capabilities of both sectors, what should they be doing separately? At the same time, where should they collaborate so that jointly, they can help develop the country’s technological capability and move activities toward the higher value chain of products and services?

Our country can only survive and prosper in the fiercely competitive world of the 21st century if we can build up this intellectual capital. We have to train scientists and engineers who can create new technologies so that the Philippines will not remain a nation of users and vendors of important technologies. This entails of real cultural revolution, a shift from a culture of imitation to a culture of innovation.]

[Seeking Sustainability reports on research in the SAREM CRSP / Southeast Asia, a collaborative project directed at answering this and related questions. Contributing authors draw on experience in an upland Philippine Watershed to derive lessons not only about environmental change and resource Management, but also about an approach to project design that stresses community participation and a landscape perspective. Local initiatives and technology transfer are both important, but plans for sustainable development must also consider changing market and policy influences on the actions of farmers and resource managers, and involve policy makers at all levels of government.]

French Consular Dispatches on the Philippine Revolution / Ma. Luisa T. Camagay Quezon City: University of the Philippine Press (in cooperation with the Office of the Chancellor, University of the Philippines), c1997
xiii, 207 p.; 22cm
971-542-172-5
$ 13.00
This volume contains a translation of selected dispatches of the French Consuls assigned to the Philippines during the Philippine Revolution. The Consular Dispatches span the Period 1896-1901.

The French Consular dispatches provide us a first hand account of the dynamics prevailing then among the Filipinos (who were referred to as insurgents in the dispatches), the Spaniards (who were preparing to leave a colony they held for more than 300 years) and the Americans (who were preparing to administer a colony). Historians stand to gain from the insights and observations made in the dispatches of consuls, like Consul Berard, who took their task seriously.

The Accounts of the French consuls oftentimes reveal information not often mentioned in standard sources of the Philippine Revolution. They reveal the obsession of the Filipinos for independence to matter how elusive it was at that moment.

Diliman : Homage to the Fifties / Elmer A. Ordenez Quezon City : The University of the Philippines Press, c2003
xvi, 257 p.; 23cm
971-542-404-x
$ 16.00

The Academe – in this case, the Diliman Campus of the state university – is a congenial place for writing. Here one can write freely despite the University of the Philippine’s Record of Having suspended some writers, notably poets Jose Garcia Villa in the later twenties and Epifanio San Juan Jr. in the mid-fifties, or censored editorial opinion in the Philippine Collegian. The Period of Martial law did not deter writers on campus from expressing themselves in ingenious ways. Paramount was the expression of their ideas and sentiments on issues within and beyond parochial concerns.

Graduates of other schools have found the campus exhilarating and flourished. A Gay writer who could not openly express himself in his own alma mater found a haven and an audience in Diliman. Political dissidents, refused reentry into their original sectarian campuses after detention, were welcome at UP.

This volume is a record of the times by one who was both witness and participant.

1. Philippines – History – Japanese Occupation
2. Manila (Philippines) – History
$ 17.50

[Occupation ‘42 narrates in its main section the impact of the Pacific phase of world War II on Filipino civilian life. It starts with students preparing for the Feast of the Immaculate Conception on December 8, 1941, the day war came to the country, and ends on the last day of 1942 with Filipino officials bowing in subjection towards the imperial palace in Tokyo.

In between are depicted the violent impact of enemy invasion on a people on the eve of independence: the departure of them enfolk for the fighting front; the declaration of Manila as an open city and the bombing by Japanese planes: the enemy entry into Manila and the radical changes in lifestyle that followed: the hope, giving way to despair, while Bataan and Corregidor bravely held out, along among the Allied bastions in the Pacific; the local Filipino victories in Bataan before the final fall, and the experiences of an enlisted man; the Bataan Death March and Capas Death Camp; the return of the survivors as released prisoners to civilian life; the refusal of most Filipino troops outside Luzon to comply with orders by their American commanders to surrender; the turning of the tide of war right after the fall of Corregidor; the establishment of convalescent homes for released war prisoners; the complete take-over of media by the Japanese; and the homecoming of the men from Japanese prison camp.

A short second section of the work covers events associated with the later campaign for liberation – the Kamikaze, the Cabanatuan raid, and the ordeal of Manila civilians in February 1945.]

[This book offers a historical sketch of the circumstances surrounding the arrival of the first Salesians in the Philippines. It took sixty years between the first request for the Salesians (1891) and their arrival to settle permanently in the Philippines (1951). Like a beautiful edifice, the congregation did not just sprout from the ground overnight. It rose slowly through years of preparation and dedicated labor. The ground breaking ceremony that signaled the beginning of the project itself was the outcome of tedious work. Even before the first foundation was laid, a lot of precious time had already been spent at negotiation tables and drawing boards.]

[This book intends to provide an accurate legal basis for informed and enlightened decision-making on the concepts, Philosophies, elements and consequences of a coup d'etat. Although the discussions that formed this book took place in 1990, readers cannot help but notice the uncanny relevance of the discourses to the current situation, and their timeliness in laying a firm legal foundation with which to better understand the legal procedures that are certain to ensue following the Oakwood Makati Incident of July 27, 2003. It also traces development of bill until its passage into law in the hope that students of law and ordinary citizens may have a better appreciation of the detailed process of legislation as a product of collegial decisions and consensus.]

[The million of Children caught in armed Conflict all over the World need immediate attention. They have not been spared from torture and other forms of human rights Violations, and even death. It is important to raise and deepen awareness and understanding of the experiences of child-victims / survivors in order to encourage mass participation in condemning torture and preventing it from repeatedly Occurring. Consequently, it is hoped that concrete and appropriate actions would be taken up to protect the rights of the Child. As Basoglu (1992) has said, “the study of torture and care of tortured individuals is not merely a humanitarian concern; it is also an effective political statement against the most abhorrent from of human rights violation.”

Supreme Court Decisions as Literature

The Philippine Supreme Court Centenary Reader, 1901-2001 Volume one 971-93054-1-X
$ 200.00 (set of 3 Vols)

The text in this book consists of excerpts from decisions of the Supreme Court from 1904 to the year 2000. These excerpts were culled primarily for the beauty and graciousness of the language used while defining the scope of the law. Given that mastery of language must be one of the competences of law practitioner, these excerpts testify to the wisdom, insights and literary sensitivity of members of our Supreme Court. From numerous volumes at the Supreme Court, the first culling of the text was done by Atty. Edna Dino and her committee of readers. The Ultimate choices for this book were made by Alfred A. Yuson, a multi-awarded poet, novelist, essayist, and film scenarist; Gemino H. Abad, poet, literature, professor and Vice President for Academic Affairs of the Philippines; and Asuncion Montemayor Albert, literature professor, and granddaughter of a Supreme Court Associate Justice.

The text in this book consists of excerpts from decisions of the Supreme Court from 1901 to the year 2001. These excerpts were chosen because they further define basic human rights and the rights of Society in the family, in religion, in school, in business and in government. These rights are embodied in the Philippine Constitution, of which these decisions are refinements and interpretations. Justice Abraham F. Sarmiento and his legal staff culled and annotated the decisions.

The text in this book consists of excerpts from decisions of the Supreme Court from 1901 to the year 2001. These decisions either made history or were made because of History. Thus they serve as a mirror of men’s lives, the society in which they lived, their interests and conflict, their manner of governance within the recent ten decades of Philippine history. Justice Camilo D. Quiason and his legal staff chose and annotated the decisions.

The Bio-Age Dawns on the Judiciary / Edited by Justice Artemio V. Panganiban
Manila : REX Book Store, Inc., c2003
The Bio-Age Dawns on the Judiciary faithfully chronicles the events in the immediately preceding twelve months of his eight anniversary in the Supreme Court. It has been a source of amazement to me and our colleagues how he has managed this while writing many ponencias and Separate opinions, plus hundreds of minute resolutions. We are grateful for his energy as we benefit from his display of his prolificacy and mental dexterity in this legal treatise which extricates the possible from the hypothetical, the emerging from the established, the literature in science, and the law in art.

Mary Martin Booksellers Philippines – Jan 04
The Central Tagbanwa people of the Philippines are on the verge of losing their language forever. In the last sixty years, the ravages of war and disease, and the large influx of migrants have drastically altered the sociolinguistic dynamics of their homeland. There is no question that Central Tagbanwa is an endangered language. If the trend shown in his study continues, the central Tagbanwa language will become only a sentimental memory to the generation now being born.

This book chronicles the language shift that has taken place among the Central Tagbanwa people in northern Palawan in the last half of the twentieth century. It also provides a linguistic description of Central Tagbanwa from data gathered from among the few remaining native speakers of the language. As such, the aim of this book is to preserve the linguistic heritage of the Central Tagbanwa people for generations to come.

[Smaller and Smaller Circles is unique in the Philippines literary scene a pinoy detective novel, both fast-paced and intelligent, with a Jesuit priest, a forensic anthropologist, as the sleuth. When it won the Carlos Palanca Grand Prize for the English Novel in 1999, it proved that fiction can be both “Popular” and “literary”.

[Johography brilliant transcribes the ineluctable mingling and cohabitation of languages and audiences within postcolonial Philippines through acts of translation, punning, quotation, and interpretation. Every poem in this collection marks a moment in which words are violently wrenched from their meanings, speakers from their speeches, texts from their readings, and histories from their contexts. What results from these splitting is not error or mistake, but poetry, and a certain kind of politics as well that questions and rewrites the linguistic and Social rules long used to valorize English at the expense of Filipino, conos at the expense of jologs, authors at the expense of readers, and heroes at the expense of ordinary people.]

[The book that started it all Philippines theater, Cinema, Radio, and Television are what they are today because, in 1967, armed with this manuscripts she wrote as a Fulbright scholar in Texas, a young woman established a theater company named the Philippine Educational Theater Association (PETA). PETA eventually became not just the country’s leading repertory company for Filipino plays, but a nationwide movement to harness the arts to empower disadvantaged people, to forge a national identity, and to put the country on the world theater map. The Vision that was and still is at the root of the national theater movement is here in this graduate thesis, now finally seeing print as a book. Many of the ideas that are mere words in this book have since become realities through the various theater groups, productions, conferences, and festivals organized by that young woman and the countless artist who trained with her.]

It provides a seldom-seem picture of the policy-making process as it thoughtfully studies the wealth of experience generated during the Aquino administration for greater political learning, especially with regard to democratization. It educates the general public about the intricacies of making government respond to reforms needed in basic sectors. It offers both theoretical and practical insights into why some sectors are more successful than others in inserting their demands into policy outcomes.]

The Essays in this volume are efforts to understand the processes of transition to democracy in five countries- Indonesia, Malaysia, Philippines, Thailand and South Korea. The common concerns running through the essays include the Asian financial crisis, the institutionalization of formal democratic processes such as a competitive party system, the struggle among Political, economic and bureaucratic elites, the intervention or non-intervention of the middle class and popular classes in the political process, and the role of civil society actors. Written from a Southern and progressive activist perspective, these essays are important contributions to the “political Science” of democratic transitions. The book tackles many contested terms associated with democratization as well as the role of the state and the market in these challenging times. While analyzing what has been achieved by the five countries in their processes of democratization, the writers also explain why so much remains to be done in terms of deepening democracy.

[Why Theology is Never far from Home proposes a Vatican II- inspired approach to and methodology of inculturation that recognizes and underscores the wisdom and genius of the Filipino culture as a rich resource for doing theology. In pointing out how any theology is, in one way or another, rooted in a particular culture- it’s “home”- the work relativizes inherited Western theologies while at the same time revaluing the potential of Filipino culture and revitalizing a cultural way of theologizing. It demonstrates how a fresh rethinking of the Judaeo-Christian Tradition in indigenous categories is not only possible, but also doable and fruitful. Opting for a hermeneutics of appreciation as the expression of his specific stance towards culture, de mesa shows how the positive in the culture can serve as a guide in theological reflection. Overall, he leads his readers, to understand why inculturation is but a recognition that theology is truly never far from “home” and why Filipino Catholics, in contrast, came to believe that genuine theology needs to be imported, adopted, and adapted.

[This book delves into this very topic- the theology of struggle. It plunges far deeper than theological reflections and oral representations available. It goes to the source of what became know as the theology of struggle –it goes to the very people themselves. It journeys with these progressive Christians as they discover a new way of life, a new way of ‘being’ church. It travels with them from early days of transformation, watches as some lose their all-important Christians identity, reports the moment when they claim their place in Philippine history, and remains with those who continue to struggle it this day. It reports crucial incidents, reveals the dangers and frustrations faced, but never loses hope. Indeed, this is not a theological text, despite its name. It is a book about a courageous group of men and women-church people from diverse backgrounds – who joined the revolutionary struggle in the Philippines.]

Power in the Village : Agrarian Reform, Rural Politics, Institutional Change and globalization / Edited by Horacio R. Morales ...(et.al)
Quezon City : Project Development Institute, and the University of the Philippines Press, c2001
xiii, 437 p.; 23cm
971-542-306-x
$  20.00
The Agrarian reform issue is very much alive – on the political agenda of many countries in Asia and Latin America and Southern Africa, both as a strategy for achieving greater equity and social justice as well as growth and development for the large numbers of poor people in developing and transition economies. There is a wide consensus among agrarian reform experts and advocates that a more equitable access to land and other assets make a positive contribution to the fight against poverty, and the efforts to ensure sustainable growth of the natural environment.

But how critical is agrarian reform in a “Globalizing” environment? This volume examines how agrarian reform shapes and is shaped by the forces of globalization, producing both desired and unintended consequences. It explores the current state of redistributive reform in the developing world, and attempts to answer the difficult questions leveled against a program that has been with us for more than a century – with mixed results.

This volume brings together the experience from across the developing and developed world, and underlines the positive contributions to agrarian reform of continued dialogue between actors from the state, non-governmental organizations, citizen’s movements, the private sector and the academe.

[This book broadens existing literature in four ways. First, Arnado Examines the class and status differentials between mistresses and maids not only as employers and employees but also as wage earners within a post-colonial, patriarchal, and capitalist society. Second, she shifts her analysis from micro to macro dynamics, from local to global, and from class to the intersection of gender, ethnicity, age, and class. Third, this study adds to the growing feminist discourse on the social construction of differences among women. While much of the debate has focused on racial differences, little attention has been directed toward class inequality. Fourth, it enriches the scholarly discourse on feminist fieldwork methodologies, particularly with regard to an indigenous woman conducting research in her own peripheral country, sharing the language, ethnicity, color and religious heritage with her interviewees. Moreover, this research puts Filipino women’s voices in the forefront in such a way that their real standpoints are documented as diverse strata. Given these contributions, this book is a good resource for undergraduate and graduate students and scholars in women’s work, feminism, and social inequality.]

[The book is the first of a series of Selected Readings in Women’s Studies that the women’s studies Association of the Philippines plans to publish. This particular volume is a collection of essays and articles that encompass cultural representations of femaleness and beauty; discourses on women’s oppression, globalization, women’s migration and migrants, and marriage; social construction of female (child) sexuality, the family, and state control in the context of incest; and notions and practices of power, value, and work in everyday life. Many of the articles deal with women’s “everyday forms of resistance” to or subversion of male power and dominant discourse. The book also includes two essays on crafting academic disciplines, such as psychology and women’s studies, that reflect and privilege local knowledges and feminist perspectives and values. Most of the contributors, including the three invited non-Filipino scholars, come from different social science disciplines: anthropology, economics, psychology and sociology. All are committed to Philippine studies and/or women’s studies.]
