[The torogan is the Maranaw’s contribution not only to traditional architecture and art but also to traditional government led by a Sultan and other titled datus and ladies. In days past when sultans were the undisputed temporal and spiritual rulers, the torogan served as office and residence, a sanctuary for the poor, distressed, and victim of injustice.
The Dayawan Torogan in Marawi City which is shown here is a 260-year old cultural edifice which once served as venue for signing of the 1935 Dansalan Declaration where selected Moro leaders drew up a petition addressed to the U.S. President asking him not to include Mindanao, Sulu and Palawan in the proposed Philippine Republic.
The sari-manok, another symbol of Maranaw art and beliefs, is also shown to emphasize the Maranaw’s triumph over his enemies, local or foreign, and his emergence as a major player in the search of peace, justice and prosperity in Mindanao.]

[There are dangerous times to be a journalist in the Philippines. Nearly 60 Filipino journalists have been killed in the line of duty since 1986, by any measure a high casualty count. The Philippines is now next only to Iraq as the most dangerous country in the world for journalists.
This book provides tips on how journalists can protect themselves, especially when they are home or at the office, the places where most of the attacks have taken place. It also tells journalists what to do in case of threats and how to behave in conflict areas or situations where they may be put to harm’s way. There are likewise instructions on what to do if a journalist is arrested or if the office of a media organization is searched. Instructions on reporting on attacks against journalists are also provided.
Unlike other safety manuals currently available, Staying Alive applies to local conditions and the specific situation, particularly provincial journalists, find themselves in.]

Perspective Paper Series No.11

[Why have housing reforms failed to achieve the desired improvements in housing in the Philippines? A review of trends in government housing strategies shows that while many problems in housing are linked to institutional barriers in the land and financial markets, government reforms simply focus on operational and program-specific issues. These reforms may be needed, but they can only be effective if basic institutional issues are first addressed. The paper posits that the efficient functioning of the land and financial markets is necessary to the efficient functioning of the housing market, requiring government to undertake major reforms in land] regulations and land administration infrastructure, including the implementation of an effective real property tax system.

[The issues of trade and investment liberalization as the core of the economic globalization process present the greatest challenges and threats to the rights and welfare of the people and the development of societies. It has been an overarching concern in the development of international networking among NGOs and social movements especially in the Asia Pacific since globalization has taken the forefront of economic issues in the world. Established in 1998, The Asia Pacific Research Network aims to develop cooperation among alternative research centers of NGOs and social movements in the Asia Pacific Region. It sees these issues affecting the lives and livelihoods of people in the region and the world as an opportunity for research and in raising the level of awareness, advocacy and growth of social movements across the region.]

History

Remembering EDSA : 20 Peoples and their Lives, 20 Years since People Power [Podcast Interviews with the Edsa 20]
Manila : Philippine Center for Investigative Journalism, c2006
1 CD
$ 10.00

[It is said that nearly a million Filipinos massed up on Edsa from February 22 to 25, 1986 to oust Ferdinand Marcos. It was one of the most stirring moments in contemporary Philippine history, one much admired throughout the world. Yet today, 20 years later, many Filipinos are also asking themselves what Edsa was all about. What did it accomplish? What went wrong? What went right? How have Filipino lives changed?]
These are difficult questions but some of the answers can be found in the lives of the 20 Filipinos featured in these podcasts. The paths they have taken provide a map of what the country has been through since Peoples Power, edition one.

The 20 Filipinos in these Podcasts include some of the main players at Edsa, but many are ordinary individuals who led extraordinary lives and made brave choices before and after 1986. Each story that is told here is but one thread of a complex tapestry, but each narratives is also part of a broader pattern. Today the luster of Edsa has been somewhat lost. But many Filipinos will always remember Edsa as our Camelot, our brief shining moment. Edsa showed to us our capacity for greatness and our willingness to sacrifice for the country’s good. It may well also be a constant reminder of promises unfulfilled and hopes dashed, but nothing that happened afterward can take away the glory of those four days.

Certainly, the fault does not lie with Edsa, or with Filipinos as a people. The well of greatness lies within us. We have yet to tap its full potential.

[This book commemorates this great event by telling the story of the town and its people. It traces the story from the pre-Hispanic beginnings, through the lengthy Spanish period which lasted three centuries, through the American and Japanese occupations, and to the present time when the townspeople are waking up from years of lethargy to regain the town’s past glory. In recounting the events which have taken place over the last 400 years, the authors have woven into the historical tapestry the town’s economic life, its festivals and religious practices, its educational system, its literary heritage, and other information which make up the color and substance of a typical Philippine town.]

Martial law in the Philippines : My Story / Aquilino Q. Pimentel, Jr.
Philippines : Cacho publishing house, c2006
xiii, 539 p. : ill. ; 26 cm.
Includes bibliography and index.
971-19-0223-0
$ 40.00
[In this book, Martial law in the Philippines: My story, Aquilino “Nene” Pimental writes primarily about the experiences that he and his family underwent during the martial law regime that president Ferdinand E. Marcos had instituted in the country in 1972 and implemented until he was forced to flee to the US in 1986. He candidly posits the vie that martial law was a gross criminal act that Marcos and his collaborators perpetrated upon the people. Also, he details how Marcos by means of cajolery, bribery and threats laid its foundation in the 1973 Constitutions with the indispensable assistance of his lieutenants in the Constitutional convention of 1971. He recalls that soon after the declaration of marital law, he was jailed in Camp Crame and thrown into a cell for hardened criminals. That was the first of his four arrests during martial rule. He also describes how he and his fellow human rights activists like Sen. Lorenzo Tanada, Sen. Joker Arroyo, Sen. Soc Rodrigo, Fr. Archie Intengan, S.J., Tito Guingona and Ernie Rondon were incarcerated in the military camp in Bicutan for waging a demonstration against the farcical Interim Batasan elections in 1978.]

1. Philippines, Museo Pambata – History
2. Children’s museums – Philippines

[Museo Pambata is the first children’s interactive museum in the Philippines. The culmination of a dedicated quest by mother-and-daughter Estefania Aldaba-Lim and Nina Lim-Yuson, the museum has inspired the enthusiastic support of Philippine society’s indefatigable doers, planners, managers, fundraisers, and workers. Through its imaginative exhibits and programs, it has transformed learning into a joyful experience for the Filipino youth. Consequently, Museo Pambata has empowered other provinces around the country to start their own children’s museum. Jacqueline V. Franquelli chronicles the decade-long history of this remarkable institution, explaining in rich detail its myriad undertakings. The second half of the book showcases over 20 lectures full of useful advice on how to establish a successful children’s museum. Illustrated with Jaime Unson’s photographs and Robert A. Alejandro’s drawings, Touch, Discover, Explore! The story Museo Pambata celebrates the ten-year existence of a “noisy and happy place” that continues to be a touchstone of wonder and discovery for ever-growing numbers of Filipino children.]

[This book is so far the most comprehensive and scholarly work on Davao History. For the first time, Davao history is pushed back further than 1848 when it was conquered by the Basque adventurer Jose Oyanguren. This book also features many new information : the most substantive discussion of each Davao tribe in any single volume, including a theory of their migration ; the Most in-depth discussion of Datu Bago as well as other Davao heroes; sample studies of the different settlers at different periods of Davao history; and the widest collection of myths and legends representing almost all the tribes of Davao, most of which are published for the first time. Writing in fluid language and adhering to rigorous scholarship, Macario Tiu Reconstructs a history of Davao culled from various texts and oral traditions, a creative research methodology which he successfully put to good use. What comes out is a vibrant retelling of Davao’s past.]

[This book makes a postcolonial reading of the American invasion and colonization of the Philippines in 1898. It considers how nineteenth century American popular culture, specifically political cartoons and caricatures, influenced American foreign policy. These sources, drawn from several US Libraries and archives, show how race and gender ideologies significantly influenced the move of the USA to annex the Philippines. The book not only includes a significant collection of political cartoons and caricatures about the Filipinos by American cartoonists and caricaturists, it also offers an alternative interpretation of the reasons why the USA ventured into colonial expansion in Asia.]

[This book attempts a spiritual biography of Jose Rizal : from the piety of his early youth, through his rejection of the divinity of Jesus Christ in early manhood, to his return to the sacraments a few hours before his execution. The authors traces Rizal’s spiritual odyssey through a meticulous investigation of his writings, particularly of his novels in conjunction with his letters and poetry. What emerges is a Rizal few Filipinos know, the survivor of two personal crises, one dating 1883 and eventually finding expression in the Noli me tangere, the other 1891 as Rizal finished the Filibusterismo. It is a more human Rizal we come to know.]

[The Roots is above all a Filipino Story.
It begins as the story of our ancestors, their differentiation into Muslims and non-Muslims, and then the division of the non-Muslims into Christians and non-Christians. It tells of their separation for centuries, and then of how the natives, Chinese and Spanish mestizos, and even some full-blooded Spaniards born in Filipinas, united to form the Christian Filipino nation. It tells of the imperfect joining of Christians and Muslims during the American colonial regime, as distinguished from the vision of Rizal and Aguinaldo of a fraternal, all-archipelago union.]

[Through charter change we seek to bring about good governance: the institutionalized capacity of our government at all levels, with the people's participation, to make policies and decisions and implement them responsively, efficiently, and effectively, and with transparency and accountability to the people. With good governance we can make progress in replacing poverty with prosperity, social inequality with social justice, corruption with effective and ethical government, and under-development with global competitiveness. But we need other factors to make our reformed and revitalized institutions succeed. We also need to develop: (1) a deeper sense of nationhood, a stronger commitment to the common good and the national interest, spirituality, moral values, and modern ethical behavior; (2) competent, responsible and accountable decisions and reforms; (3) responsible citizens who are empowered economically, socially and politically as members of a growing middle class; and (4) a productive, competitive, and responsible private sector and an equitable economy. By putting these things in place, we shall be building a nation worthy of our heroes, a country fit for our children-of which we can all be proud.]

[Fray Francisco Coronel, OSA did not write the first Kapamangan grammar, or the best, but his Arte y Reglas de la Lengua Pampanga is the oldest in experience. And with this publication, it is now also the first Kapampangan grammar from that period to be translated into English. It is also the Kapampangan’s good fortune that the first missionaries sent here were the best minds in their respective seminaries in Spain; actually, the Augustinians had no choice but to send their best linguists, translators and grammarians because, well, they had not anticipated that there would be so many languages here.
Fray Colonel was one such missionary; he was only 20 years old when he first came to the Philippines in 1606; by the time he died in 1630, his peers had recognized him as an expert on Kapampangan language. He wrote the Arte to make it easier for his fellow Augustinians to communicate with their parishioners, but the Arte (and other similar works) did more than that. It documented the language as the conquistadors had found it; it also recorded rare anthropological notes about the Kapampangans at the time. This book provides a glimpse into those misty, exotic early days in Pampanga.

Writing Literary History : Mode of Economic Production and Twentieth Century Waray Poetry / Jose Duke S. Bagulaya
Quezon City : The University of the Philippines Press, c2006
xx, 338 p. ; 23 cm.
971-542-436-8
$ 15.00

[The book is primarily a history of literary forms and modes of economic production. It traces the interrelationship between the formation of poetic forms and the shifts in... the Philippine political economy. It argues that a specific poetic form develops under a definite mode of economy. In proving this thesis, the author uses a four-code theoretical concept-mode of production, class relations, aesthetics, and dialectics of forms- to elucidate the complicated relationship between literature and economy. The book also contains an anthology of hard-to-find poetry of Leyte and Samar, the eighth and third largest islands of the country’s more than 7,000 islands. It includes original and translation of the unique satirical poetry of the Warays, the radio siday, the contemporary modernist poetry of the intellectuals, and the poetry of the famous revolutionary guerrillas of the twin islands. Half of the anthologized poetry appears in book form for the first time. As a whole, the book is a compact critical account and anthology of one of the major literatures of the Philippines.

The Knowing is in the Writing : Notes on the Practice of Fiction / Jose Y. Dalisay Jr.
[Part manual, part testament, part autobiography, The Knowing is in the Writing: Notes on the Practice of Fiction was written by the author to engage new and young writers of fiction not only in matters of craft but also of life and livelihood. Beginning with an overview of the nature and elements of fiction, the book then deals with specific issues in the writing of fiction, from plotting and characterization to the workshop experience and publishing one’s first book. “Through fiction,” Dalisay says, “we best make sense of our lives by stepping away from them-by momentarily becoming strangers unto ourselves, by exploring more interesting alternatives to what we already know or most likely would do, and, ultimately, by giving ourselves a new reason to hope and believe that life indeed follows a plot we can direct-if we only knew what it was.”]

[Here is a comprehensive survey of Early Philippine Literature, covering the Ancient, Spanish, Nationalistic and American periods. Each period is represented by a wide range of selections. The book showcases the entire range of our literary heritage, from our unique ethno-epics, to a wide-ranging literature of religion and morality, to the literature of the Propoganda and Revolution, to our first forays into western literary topics. This also includes works of little-known but landmark authors, as well as indigenous literary forms. This revised edition includes a built-in handbook to help the teacher, the student and the general reader. This is comprised of

- Teaching Notes that
  - introduce literary types and
  - present the literary-historical background of each period
- Study Guides that list
  - additional textual reading
  - suggested topics and exercises for individual or group work, and
  - references for further study.]

[This book is a first reader in Philippine dance, observed through forty-five years of viewing, reviewing, and doing. It is one observer’s understanding of what, where, or how is dance, and who makes it and why we dance. It attempts to answer these question, aware that more questions ought to be further asked. Each section traces the recesses of the pond that is dance, the water within, the sky, the passing clouds, and the faces reflected above.]

[This study analyzes the ongoing conflict in southern Thailand and southern Philippine between indigenous Muslim minorities and their respective central governments. In particular, it investigates and interrogates the ideological context and content of conflicts in southern Thailand and southern Philippines insofar as they pertain to Islam and radicalism in order to assess the extent to which these conflicts have taken on a greater religious character and the implications this might have on our understanding of them. In the main, the monograph argues that while conflicts in southern Thailand and southern Philippines have taken on religious hues as a consequence of both local and external factors, on present evidence they share little with broader radical global Islamist and Jihadist ideologies and movements, and their contents and contexts remain primarily political, reflected in the key objective of some measure of self-determination, and local, in terms of the territorial and ideational boundaries of activism and agitation. Furthermore, though both conflicts appear on the surface to be driven by similar dynamics and mirror each other, they are different in several fundamental ways.]

[The Golden Jubilee of the Bandung Afro-Asia conference is an important occasion to reflect on the aspirations of independence, liberation, peaceful coexistence and development for Third world countries – concerns that are as important and urgent now as they were in 1955 during the early years of the cold war. Imperialist globalization and war presents the same and even greater challenges to the aspirations of independence, liberation, peaceful coexistence and development by the rest of the world living in the Third world. It was therefore important to commemorate the Spirit of Bandung and the principles behind that spirit.]

[The essays in this book address the multi-layered and trans-disciplinary agenda faced by us today while reexamining the identity of Asia as a hybrid entity with diverse and pluralistic values from both a conceptual and practical standpoint. The hope is that the growing solidarity of Asian public intellectuals with lay the foundation for the future of Asia’s regional unity in diversity. This book poses fundamental questions on the validity of constructions of Asia, not only within Eurocentric and Orientalist, but also within Asia and Asian, discourse.]

[As we enter the 21st century, just over half of the world’s population lives in cities. It is projected that the population in urban areas will double in the next twenty-five years, and that the proportion of urban dwellers will increase to seventy-five percent by 2025. Much of this increase will take place in Asia. Urbanization is accompanied by rapid social change, with important implications for the religious life of the people. It has long been believed that the displacement and loss of cultural religious ties that accompany urbanization, along with religiously pluralistic environment of urban areas, will exacerbate the trend towards secularization in modern society. Urbanization will necessarily affect all aspects of Christian mission in Asia and the Pacific: Parish ministry, education, formation, work for justice and peace, communications, and family ministry. The SVD Asia-Pacific Association of Mission Researchers (ASPAMIR) held a symposium on the topic of urbanization and mission in Asia and the Pacific on 15-19 October 2001, in Mumbai, India. This collection represents some of the papers that were delivered at the symposium.]

The first book published in 2000 is Canon law on marriage: Introductory notes and comments, where, as here, I tried to present the different positions regarding controverted questions, what I think is the correct interpretation of the law, and the reason for the position taken. When I was preparing these pages, I had in mind, mainly but not exclusively, these already responsible for the care of souls as well as those still studying cannon law in preparation for the ordained ministry.]

[Possible Works in Impossible Spaces is a pioneering work that shows how we can think about information technology (IT). The starting point of this exploration is the claim that Filipinos are “the best IT professionals in the world”. What underlies such a claim? By looking at Filipino intermediate developers who create IT products needed by everyday users using frameworks and infrastructure created elsewhere, this book illuminates two relatively new worlds in Philippine society: One refers to technological spheres where women participate in; the other hosts global-local technological encounters. These worlds challenge notions from the new international division of labour that looks at the Philippines as a site of assembly and its women as assembly-line workers.

A number of factors have been favorable to the emergence of a heterotopia in the Philippine IT industry, including the existence of a large pool of talented English-speaking, American educational system-trained members of intermediate developers who are available for relatively low wages, a school system that teaches “learning to learn” and a stock of well-educated and independent women.]

[Combining quantitative and qualitative modes of inquiry, this study looks into the world of women who have been marked for death. It offers new ways of understanding the circumstances of women in prison, specifically the women on death row, from a gender and rights-based perspective. While the overarching theme is the abolition of the death penalty, the study does not set out to test the innocence or guilt of the women on death row. Its aim is to derive from the women’s life stories conceptual handles with which to engage and interrogate the flaws in the country’s justice and penal systems. As an alternative to the retributive nature of the existing punishment regime, it offers Restorative Justice as a more effective response to crime and criminality.
By bringing to the outside world the lived realities of women who have been tried and condemned to death by the criminal justice system, this book is a major contribution to the ongoing campaign to repeal the death penalty law in the Philippines.]

[Don’t Ever Tell Me You Can’t is an inspiring true story of grit and resilience of an immigrant Asian woman who battles absolute poverty, language barriers, racial and gender discrimination and succeeds in a male-dominated field.

During the Viet Nam war, Celia Ruiz already an established civil engineer in the Philippines, responds to the United States’ announcement of engineer shortage. She comes alone, confident that $300 and her civil engineer’s diploma are enough to find a new life in the land of opportunity, or so she thinks. When she sets out to look for work, she is told she can never find a job as a civil engineer. She braces herself for a hard fight that she is determined to win.

Celia traces her strength to her upbringing and experience in the late ‘50s when females were openly harassed in engineering school. For two decades, Celia formulates strategies and stays the course. Finally, before age becomes yet another hurdle, Celia finds the way to clear the path to the American Dream—for her, owning an engineering company! The book closes with pointers on how to pursue a dream to fruition.]
