The year 2013 is seen as a year of change for China. The country's new leadership has announced a series of social and economic reforms that places greater emphasis than ever before on market forces. The reform programs are expected to have significant implications for commercial enterprises, domestic and foreign alike, when operating in China. In Blue Book of China's Commercial Sector (2014), the National Academy of Economic Strategy (NAES) of the Chinese Academy of Social Sciences (CASS) and the Fung Business Intelligence Centre jointly present a comprehensive account of the latest developments in the commercial sector of China. Starting with the macroeconomic background of domestic consumption in China and recent pricing trends, the Blue Book provides in-depth analyses of the different industries including retailing, wholesale and distribution, logistics, e-commerce, and catering. Popular topics such as online retailing, luxury market, department store and retail logistics in China are also covered.

This two-volume set looks at the current levels of inflation in China and offers predictions for the near-future. The authors survey the trends of the recent past and use a full range of statistics from the last 10 years to offer a frank assessment of current inflationary policy in China.

Reveals the internal causes of inflation by highlighting:

- Links between the Flexible Renminbi (RMB) Exchange Rate and Inflation
- False Transmission between CPI and PPI
- Price Fluctuations of Bulk Commodities and Inflation

In an era where the Renminbi is poised to potentially become a globally traded reserve currency, an awareness of the risks of China's inflationary policy is essential. The series is the invaluable works on this vital topic for those doing business in China today.

This series looks at the impact from the institutional evolution of the wage system, social networks, and geographical factors on the determination of wages. After reviewing the history of China's wage policies and systematic transformation, the author examines the collective negotiation system as an example of institutional changes to explore the impacts on employees' wages, and does an empirical study on the shrinkage in labor's share of national income by using industrial and provincial data.

Based on the discussion of local policy-making decisions under fiscal federalism in China, the author also analyzes the regional wage differences with economic geographical and regional policy variances. The perspective of inter-industrial wage spillover is also followed to explain the wage differences and convergence paradox.

Development and Reform of China's Employment System reviews the evolution, reform, and achievements of China's employment system over a period of 30-plus years since 1978, predicts future trends, and puts forward feasible ways and suggestions for further development. Comprising seven parts, the book covers a wide range of meaningful topics such as the market-oriented reform of state-owned enterprises, reemployment of layoffs, transfer of surplus rural labor, the formation and development of China's public service system, the proactive government policy for job creation, and the laws and rules promulgated by the government in terms of employment and social security. For each major employment policy, the book presents the historical background against which it was proposed and then provides detailed description and analysis of this policy, its implementation, its achievements, and lessons learned.

Hong Kong is one of the world's most densely populated cities. Land supply, property values, and housing provision are inextricably linked with the city's economic growth and questions of economic equality. In Hong Kong Land for Hong Kong People, Yue Chim Richard Wong traces the history of Hong Kong's postwar housing policy. He then discusses current housing problems and their solutions, drawing on examples from around the world. Wong argues that housing policy in Hong Kong, with its multiple, often incompatible objectives, and its focus on supply over demand, can no longer satisfy the needs of a diverse and dynamic population. He recommends three simple low-cost policies to promote homeownership and social mobility: sell public rental housing units to the sitting tenants; make subsidized homes more affordable; and reform the public housing program along lines adopted in Singapore, where government-built housing may be resold or leased in a free market.
