650gm.

The name of the place is Kirua Vunjo. When the earliest emigrants came and settled on the slopes of Kilimanjaro, they found a well secluded place to hide from their persuaders and suitable for animal keeping and farming. They did not come as one but different people, with diverse backgrounds, sharing only one similar motive; survival and survival of their posterity. Obstacles to this were many. As they wrestled with indigenous wakonyingo, they hunted and were hunted by beasts as they continued to live and adapt to the profound hostility of nature. In the cause of this, emigrants and natives blended, and a new progeny was born.

In more than 20 years of Kiswahili for foreigners, I have not come across a text of such beautiful stories written by author Marc Eichen. His technique of using real insults and using language forms of the language is of the best! These three stories are a sabana mkuba in the eloquence of Kiswahili for the locals and abroad. They will greatly help teachers and students to understand the nuances of the Kiswahili and English languages, as well as the language used by the school. Brothers Suleiman Khalfan and Abdulrahman Ndegwa have also given a fair interpretation, focusing entirely on what he intended for the wings of the stories themselves.

A female soldier, Hannan Halfani discovers the big secret behind the plan to kill President Mark Mwazilindi while in the palace grounds. From Hannan's mouth, he conveys the secret to the ear of a talented detective in Tanzania, Daniel Mwaseba. Daniel and Hanna working with the independent investigator, Martin Feeling, go to work and begin to investigate the case of the assassination of the president. You are becoming a very difficult thread. An investigation that takes them through a dense forest and takes them through unusually terrifying events. An investigation that brings them closer to death than at any time in their detective lives.

That night I was in charge of preparing for the night lessons. Rose called me, and I answered it. While I was talking to him, I was walking slowly as if I was going to the dormitories. Suddenly, I saw the lights of the dormitory where the "Spiders" are sleeping turn on and off, and I knew it was an error in the electrical system. I wanted to move so that I can confirm and then give an early notice to the management and the repairs should be done. I moved to the door, the lights turned on directly, and since there were signs of the presence of a student, I wanted to know why he was not in the classroom when all his classmates were studying. I entered and found a very quiet situation, I walked until near the end of the dormitory, what I saw was a great shame! You can't believe it, when the "spiders" saw me, they dropped their wings! They remained as they were born..

Mji wa Kambare is a council composed with competence and skill of its kind to attract everyone who reads it, whether he is a literary and linguist or a person from any field. This is due to a good selection of words that are compatible with each other and have enough balance to encourage the heart of the reader. Muwala, great skill in arranging words, construction of images and language of pictures, skill in making the reader think, the breadth of purpose and content found in the compositions contained in this diwan touch almost all aspects of human life.

Hurdles And Prospects of African Integration : The Question Of Western Sahara / Maxmillian Julius Chuhila & James Motto

vii, 124p.

$ 35.00 / HB

415gm.

Scholarship about Western Sahara is often divided into two extreme sides. One side considers and advocates for self determination as the best way to go yet ignoring proposals as the only way of ending the western sahara conundrum. Missing in both side is the courage to compromise and consider alternative pathways to the question.
