Small Business Management and Entrepreneurship in Hong Kong : A Case Study /
Edited by Ali Farhoomand
Hong Kong : Hong Kong University Press, c2005. xxvii, 296 p. ; 26cm.
962-209-758-8

[Small and medium companies are the prime engine for economic growth in Hong Kong and to a large extent, in southern China. So-called "SMEs" account for 95 percent of companies in Hong Kong and employ about two-thirds of the workforce. The managers and entrepreneurs behind these companies contribute to all aspects of Hong Kong's development. Yet it is interesting to note that the management of small businesses is significantly different from that of multinational companies. Management experiences vary widely on account of the different skills, resources and environmental pressures that SMEs face. There is no doubt that the various facets of SME management warrant deeper study.

The University of Hong Kong's Asia Case Research Center (ACRC) -- with the backing of the Trade and Industry Department of the Hong Kong Government -- has undertaken the development of a series of case studies to showcase the challenges facing small businesses and entrepreneurs in Hong Kong, and some innovative approaches they adopted. The case studies are topically diverse, and span a range of managerial functions and sectors. This casebook is an anthology of 28 cases from the series. The cases are written with a strong management perspective to offer a practical and interesting look at how successful entrepreneur-managers in Hong Kong systematically generate innovations in the shape of successful new products, services, processes and technologies when faced with various organizational and environmental challenges. They constitute a comprehensive self-contained course of study; each case can also be considered on its own.]

Hedda Morrison's Hong Kong : Photographs and Impressions 1946-47 / Edward

[In September 1946, when the photographer Hedda Morrison reached Hong Kong, it remained little changed from decades earlier. Acclaimed for her images of China taken in the 1930s and 1940s, Hedda Morrison delighted in recording the patterns of everyday life. Now, captivated by Hong Kong and its people, she embraced the colony's diversity. For six months, cameras in hand, Morrison roamed its districts, streets coasts and valleys. This book presents the people and place she encountered.

Within years, much of what Hedda Morrison witnessed in 1946-47 would be swept aside. Yet when she was there with colonial precincts, tenement streets, bustling markets, itinerant hawkers, fisherfolk and rice farmers. In this book, Edward Stokes's essays that portray the postwar years. Hedda Morrison's photographs are the work of a masterful artistic photographer. However, fewer than thirty of this book's reproductions have ever been seen before. It was those images, first sighted in a 1946 government report, that led Edward Stokes to begin searching for Morrison's original negatives -- which later were discovered at the Harvard-Yenching Library of Harvard University.

This is a unique record of a now vanished Hong Kong - the most complete pictorial account of how the colony looked during the decades from the early 1930s to the 1950s. Hedda Morrison's photographs will appeal to all who value documentary images, Asian History, and the ethnography of urban traders, crafts and rural life.]

[This is an Analytical study of the author's Chinese translation of Yes Prime Manipulator (London: BBC Books, 1986), a work characterized by British political humour. Adopting a target-oriented approach, the book aims primarily to uncover the regularities that mark the relationship between function, process and product of the translated text. It finds that the translation product has been overdetermined by the interplay of a large number of factors besides the source text, namely, socio-political condition, literary and translation traditions, and the translator's poetics and ideology. The findings are brought to bear on a number of theories, especially the polysystem theory and other theories of the so-called "Manipulation School". An augmented version of the polysystem hypothesis proposed in an attempt to better accommodate investigations into the role of the translator together with other socio-cultural factors involved in the translation.]

[Throughout Hong Kong's history, local people have dreaded, misunderstood, loved, and laughed at the foreigners in their midst. At first they found those strangers threatening and called them 'Foreign Devils', but today the term fan gweilo is more often uttered in a natural, ironic, or even an affectionate way. Based on interviews and memories, Foreign Devils presents a picture of the lives of expatriates in Hong Kong. Their recollections-candid, quizzical, touching, serious, and not so serious-are concerned as much with the great events and dramas of the day as with the delights and the place-the Governor Administrative Region no less than the single mother of adopted Chinese babies. They are all participants in the story of modern Hong Kong, which developed out the matchless synergy of Western enterprise and Chinese ingenuity. The Historical panorama would have been much less colorful without their commitment, talents, humor, and even, occasionally, their skullduggery.]

[According to the statistics from the Hong Kong Police, around 6000 juveniles (aged 7 to 15) were arrested each year in the last ten years. Although not all these young people arrested were convicted as delinquents, the problem of youth-at-risk has drawn attention from the public and the government. Various Western and local theories have been offered to account for the problem. Some commonly recognized categories of at-risk youth are youth gangs, young substance abusers, school bullies, and cautioned juveniles. These young people are usually perceived as having an impulsive nature; they require welfare services rather than punishment as Criminals.

This volume is a collection of chapters covering various aspects of the youth problem. Besides examining the causes of the problem and the principles behind the solution, different and effective approaches in working with the various categories of at-risk youths are introduced. The overall aim is to help this group of young people to lead a healthy life and integrate into society as contributing members. The book contains both theory and practice, and is suitable for social work students and professionals.]
