Examines the first decade after the establishment of Ankara as the capital of Turkey, from the proclamation of the Turkish Republic in 1923 until 1933. With a particular focus on the recently developed Yeni Şehir ("new city") district of Ankara, Ali Cengizkan and N. Müge Cengizkan chronicle the construction of a new city center in war-torn Turkey in the first quarter of the twentieth century. The authors fill critical gaps in the historiography of the city by sharing the ideas and experiences of its dwellers, exploring the social dynamics of the dissolution of the planned environment, and analyzing the causes and effects of modernization.

Ottoman Empire is a great empire that ruled for 600 years in three continents. In the territories that it ruled for 600 years, Ottoman Empire was governed by thirty-six sultans. In this work, these sultans who left their traces in the most glorious days of our history are approached as distinct from their times' standards of judgement and our contemporary understanding. Dates of birth and death of sultans are addressed chronologically. In addition to this, after informations about wives, children, personalities and regnal years of the sultans are given; significant events are examined with the main lines.

"This study is an attempt to understand better the development of Ottoman administrative structure and political culture by focusing on Celâlzâde Mustafa Çelebi's (1490-1567) life, career and works. Celâlzâde Mustafa witnessed formation of Ottoman "classical" organization and culture during 16th century and he is accepted as one of the most influential author-bureaucrats during that time. His nickname "koca nişancı" which means old and great at the same time, indicates his venerated status among divan-i humayun scribes. He served for Ottoman chancery for more than 50 years; first as a scribe and private secretary of the grand vezir, then for 9 years as reisü'l-küttab and for 23 years as nişancı. Celâlzâde Mustafa contributed to the formation of Ottoman "classical" culture with his bureaucratic activities and works written on different subjects such as history, ethics, Ottoman law, religious studies and poetry."

I left a few books by Orhan Pamuk and George Orwell on the table. My classmates tracked me in amazement when I carried all those books to the lecturer's desk. I was a doctoral candidate in the Comparative Literature program in Istanbul, and every session, two or three students presented a lecture on a book during the semester. I confidently announced that I would talk about a few books by Pamuk and Orwell for the whole session. That snowy day in 2012, I was blind to any relation between Orwell, Pamuk, and their discussed titles, and the only reason to talk about them was an accident choice of my recently read books. However, after three hours, I had only discussed Istanbul, My Name is Red, and Other Colours by Pamuk. After that session, the value I received invoked me to collect and read Pamuk's other books translated into English.
