Irrigation and Agriculture in Sri Lanka / Edited by Ric Shand Colombo : Institute of Policy Studies, c2002 xvi, 297 p.; 22cm.
955-8708-11-9
1. Agriculture – Sri Lanka
2. Irrigation – Sri Lanka
$ 22.50

[Written by distinguished specialists in the field and edited by Ric Shand, this book is a comprehensive study in the development of irrigation and agriculture in post-independent Sri – Lanka. It explores in depth the agricultural policies of successive Governments from 1950 to the 1990's, and critically examines the impact investment in irrigation schemes had not only on the agricultural sector but also other sectors in the economy. The book enhances the reader's understanding of the subject matter by delineating the history that influenced consecutive policy makers to pursue self-sufficiency in food, mainly rice. Having first examined in detail some of the important issues and problems associated with irrigation schemes, the book then explores options for future investment in irrigation and the possibilities of diversifying the commercial agricultural sector in Sri Lanka.]

[Dafther Jailany, at the edge of the Balangoda plateau in the Ratnapura district, is a mountain retreat on the ancient road from Galle to Ratnapura and Adam's Peak. The rock cave mosque at Dafther Jailany is associated with one of the greatest saints in Islamic history, namely Sheikh Muhiyadeen Abdul Qadir Gilani.

The Saint and Dafther Jailany are linked by more than name – rock carvings, Arabic inscriptions, writings, tombstones and legend indicate that the Saint meditated at Dafther Jailany for a period and there are many stories about the Saint's visit and his impact on Dafther Jailany. Today, Dafther Jailany is the main focal point for Sufism in Sri Lanka, and this is the story of this sacred rock cave mosque.]

[Study of Word Formation in English is one of the fascinating subjects, a subject that should fall within the scope of Modern Linguistics. Nevertheless, there is still no clear-cut or acceptable definition or theory of word formation encompassing all types of sources that should come under it. This may sometimes prompt the writers to wander about when they deal with the study or classification of word formation, as is done by the present writer.]

Euphemisms, Neologisms, Eponyms, Language and Literary Terms, and Languages :

The Sixth text in the "Advanced English for Higher Education" Series

$ 25.00

[The "Advanced English for Higher Education" series which the present author writes in seven volumes is a comprehensive account on the English Language, other languages and styles, grammar, linguistics and literature. In the process he has repeatedly emphasized the importance of becoming familiar with words and using them in proper context. With this advice in mind, he presents this volume for a wider readership – a volume that contains euphemisms (good words); neologisms (new words); eponyms (words from the names of persons); language and literary terms; languages, lingua francas, pidgins and creoles; Guinness Records of language and words; and artificial languages including Esperanto.]

New Theories of Grammar, and Introduction to Linguistics and Its Related Disciplines

The Seventh text in the "Advanced English for Higher Education" Series $ 25.00

[This volume meticulously examines new theories of grammar and the subject of linguistics. In other words, it is mainly an exercise in 'Chomskyan grammar and Linguistics'. What is 'new' in the theory of grammar? In the normal sense of the word, 'grammar' is concerned with the rules governing the formation of words and the construction of sentences. But the chapter that deals with new theories of grammar is totally a different proposition.]

[This anthology collects, for the first time, some of the earliest writing in English by women in Sri Lanka (Ceylon). From British and American Women travelers such as Bella Woolf, Constance Gordon Cummings and Carolyn Corner who wrote of their impressions and experiences of colonial Ceylon, to the creative writing of Jessie, Alice and Jane Goonetilleke, Rosalind Mendis, Mabel Fernando and Ina Trimmer - early Sri Lankan women writers in English, the anthology pays tribute to a rich genealogy of English writing by women in Sri Lanka. A Variety of themes and styles animate this work from the traveler's tale to folklore, ghost stories, historical fiction and social satire, all the while fore-grounding a colonial society in transition. A Critical introduction conceptualizing this writing is included.]

[This is the story of a young Buddhist monk in an imaginary Buddhist land. Although he realizes that there is corruption among the Buddhist clergy and laity in his particular situation, he is deeply convinced that the teaching of the Buddha is sublime and true. He encounters a variety of Buddhist monks and laymen and understands the futility of associating with them in his role as a monk. Yet his personal obligations and commitment to his patron mentor keep him from leaving the order. This forces him to lead a double life. He cultivates the prerequisites of a layman in a modern consumer society, using his intellectual abilities and personal skills, rather than joining in the power struggle in the Temple. His story is full of disillusionment with the present Buddhist order but it is not an indictment of the order of Sangho prescribed by the Buddhho. Although the places and characters are fictitious, the events described in the story are illustrative of changes taking place in the Buddhist monastic order in today's society.]

[The Tradition of Dutch Mapmaking in Ceylon began in 1602 and continued throughout the period of their occupation of the island.

In the Preparation of this book, the authors were given access to rare collections of maps and plans in institutions in The Netherlands, England and Sri Lanka and now share it with readers of this comprehensive collection of Dutch Cartography.

The Introduction traces the evolution of the shape and size of the 2nd century Ptolemaic map of Taprobana to that of present day Sri Lanka.

Over thirty general maps of the entire island the better – known printed maps and many manuscript maps – provide an excellent coverage of the section on Atlas and Geographical maps.

Several Sectional maps and plans of towns, not previously published have been included, giving an insight into the meticulous care exercised in Dutch mapmaking.

This book is to be savoured for its colourful collection and the scholarly commentaries that accompany the maps.]

[Lionsong is a vast sweeping analysis of Sri Lanka's ethnic conflict. It traces the country's post Independence history in a frank narrative that hides nothing. The principal issues affecting the conflict, from the theory of traditional Tamil homelands to military corruption, are discussed in detail. This book destroys many myths built up around the conflict, and isolates true issues of contention that still exist. Lionsong is also a serious discourse on the threat of terrorism, and the dangers of ignoring it for political expediency. It makes recommendations for far reaching policy reform that would address social, economic and political root causes of insurgency. It examines the true prospects of a lasting peace, and what the Government of Sri Lanka must do to achieve it.]

[This publication is a result of a three-year effort invested in the realization and data analysis of an island-wide National Youth Survey in Sri Lanka, covering nearly 3000 households, including the North and East of the Country. The Quantitative research was complemented by qualitative case studies about specific segments of youth. The immediate aim of the National youth Survey, conducted in 1999/2000 was to collect up to-date and reliable information about opinions, values, perceptions, concerns, grievances and aspirations of the young generation in Sri Lanka. Further, it aimed at the identification and better understanding of the main problems young people are facing, and of their own potential, commitments, and ideas to solve them, thus contributing to the improvement of policy and development activities in regard to youth.]

[This volume brings together six studies conducted under the project, Women and Governance / Democratic Process in South Asia : Re-Imagining the State, Carried out by the six organizations described below.

The research draws on archives, interviews, a survey and focus group discussions to address two sets of issues : Women's engagement with formal political processes, and women's experiences and visions of the state. It is intended to inform initiatives that will promote women's active engagement in governance at the local, national and regional levels.
