ECONOMICS

Land Tenure in Cambodia : A Data Update / Chan Sophal, Tep Saravy and Sarthi Acharya

Phnom Penh : Cambodia Development Resource Institute, c2001

v, 66 p.; 30cm

Working Paper No. 19

ISSN : 1560-9197

$ 14.00

[This paper first presents the allocation of land to different uses and then examines data on land and fisheries concessions. The registration and titling process and data are next examined. Finally, the paper retabulates and interprets data from eight socio-economic surveys conducted in Cambodia in the recent years in order to analyse the information on land that they provide. The aim of this final chapter is to count the number of land parcels in the country, calculate the average size of parcels, estimate landlessness and land inequality, and make a preliminary estimate of the relationship between poverty and landlessness.]

Fish exports from the Great Lake to Thailand : An Analysis of Trade Constraints, Governance, and the Climate for Growth / Yim Chequ and Bruce McKenney

Phnom Penh : Cambodia Development Resource Institute, c2003

vii, 56 p.; 30cm

Working Paper 27

ISSN : 1560-9197

$ 14.00

[This paper assesses the current conditions under which fish are exported from the Great Lake to Thailand, including an examination of the typical market structure and credit/Financing arrangements, analysis of key trade and export constraints, quantification of transaction costs, and assessment of the official regulatory framework in comparison to actual practices. Following which, a number of policy recommendations are provided that aim to support improvements in trade efficiency, governance, and the climate for economic growth.]

Trading Forest Products in Cambodia : Challenges, Threats, and Opportunities for Resin / Prom Tola and Bruce McKenney

Phnom Penh : Cambodia Development Resource Institute, c2003

vii, 58 p.; 30cm

Working Paper 28

ISSN : 1560-9197

$ 14.00

[Forests support rural livelihoods in Cambodia in a number of Important ways. Almost all rural Cambodians use forest resources for cooking fuel and construction materials. Many also collect forest products for household use and income generation through trade. To explore the conditions under which forest product trade in conducted, and how such conditions under which forest product trade in conducted, and how such conditions affect rural livelihoods, this study focuses on resin. Tapped Mainly from Evergreen tree species, resin in used domestically for sealing and waterproofing boats and exported for higher value uses.

Because tapping is common income generation activity for forest communities across Cambodia, improvements in resin trade that increase returns to tappers could have a widely beneficial impact on rural livelihoods. To this end, this paper assesses the challenges, threats, and opportunities for resin trade. Key areas addressed include describing resin tapping methods and uses, examining the threat of logging to tapping activities, analysing the market structure for resin production and trade, describing the current regulatory framework and actual practices, and assessing key challenges to resin trade. Following which, a number of policy recommendations are identified for improving resin trade in a manner consistent with national objectives to reduce poverty, ensure food security, increase pro-poor trade, and improve forest management.]

Domestic Fish Trade : A Case Study of Fish Marketing from the Great Lake to Phnom Penh / Yim Chea and Bruce McKenney

v, 24 p.; ill.; 30cm

Working Paper 29

ISSN : 1560-9197

$ 9.00

[Freshwater fish are one of Cambodia's most important traded commodities, Sold live in Containers, fresh on ice, and in a wide variety of processed products, fish are traded widely within Cambodia, with the majority of trade originating at the Tonle Sap (Great Lake). There are many steps and challenges involved with fish trade. Inefficiencies in any area can contribute to higher marketing costs, which in turn can negatively affect the income of, not just fish marketers, but fishers and others working in the fisheries sector as well.

Complementing previous research on fish exports (Working paper 27), this paper assesses current conditions under which freshwater fish are marketed from two major landing sites at the Great Lake to retail markets in Phnom Penh – the largest domestic fish trade route. Key issues explored include the market structure for trade, the role of financing and credit, and major marketing transactions and constraints. Following which, policy recommendations are provided that aim to bring greater competition in fish distribution, reduce fish value losses, and improve marketing efficiency.]

[This monograph examines the careers of 40 cadres who worked in Division 703. Many young men and women between the ages of 15 and 18 joined the Khmer Rouge between 1970 and 1973, believing that they could help return Prince Norodom Sihanouk to power and end Cambodia's civil war. However, by 1974, after the number of volunteers began to wane, village and commune chiefs increasingly forced children to become cadres.

Those who survived the January 1979 defeat of the Khmer Rouge returned to their villages, only to find themselves called to their commune offices for "training" by leaders of new People's Republic of Kampuchea government in the early 1980s. While some of them were allowed to return home after a short period of questioning and "reeducation", most of the former S-21 and Prey Sar cadres were to provincial prisons or the T-3 prison in Phnom Penh as a result of their involvement with the Khmer Rouge regime.]

[For the last two years, a team of Reyum researchers have been interviewing elderly Cambodians about their lives in order to compile a Memory Bank of everyday life in late 19th and 20th Century Cambodia. For this particular book, the researchers have focused on the topic of clothing and longstanding habits of bodily care found in Cambodia before modernization. The book details traditional types of cloth and clothing, ways of cutting, sewing, and keeping clothing, as well as habits of beauty and care used prior to the advent of readymade manufactured products.]
