This is the story of the successes and challenges faced in building the fast expanding rural sanitation network in India. It presents a detailed account of the development of the rural sanitation movement in India in the last decade. The book presents a historical account of the importance attached to sanitation and hygiene in ancient India and the evolution of sanitation policy in modern India. This book captures in detail the key debates and challenges faced in making policy makers and program managers across the states accept the reform principles in the Total Sanitation Campaign. The book outlines a vision for the future of the sanitation program in India and offers innovative ideas for launching a second generation of sanitation initiatives.

A Study on the condition and struggles of agricultural workers in different parts of the world, in Asia particularly, contributes a great deal to advocacy and direct actions by peasants. This study has been launched precisely to create that contribution. This study aims to describe the current economic, political and cultural state of agricultural workers in selected plantation farms in the Philippines, India and Sri Lanka, as affected by neoliberal policies and programmes. More importantly, it aims to lay down the strategies that would be most effective at country and regional levels in confronting globalization and asserting agricultural workers' rights, access and control over their resources.
