The lapidary collection of the Museum of Saint Sophia constitutes a priceless patrimony of sculpted marbles; though little known, it deserves of complete and systematic study. This guidebook is conceived as a useful companion devoted to the scientific divulgation of this important collection of sculptures of the city of Istanbul. Each marble sculpture, pleasantly arranged in the blooming garden in front of Saint Sophia, represents a significant "tessera" in the mosaic of the Late Antique and Byzantine city. This book offers all visitors to the Museum the opportunity to become more acquainted with these 'marble treasures', treasures so frequently disregarded as a result of the overshadowing magnificence of the Justinianic building.

The Philippines Through the Lens of An American Soldier (1898-1907): The Harry Whitfield Harnish Photographic Collection
Philippines: National Commission for Culture and the Arts
CD-ROM
$ 50.00

This collection of photographs and perspectives on aspects of Philippine social life dwells on the vision of an American soldier as well as on the interdisciplinary outlook of critics of representation and its ramifications. Harry Whitfield Harnish was stationed in the Philippines during the American imperialist occupation of the islands. Returning the look of the dominant gaze of exploration and surveillance unsettles the imagination of conquest as it redeems the possibility of a reciprocal and resistive exchange of sights in the present.

I Like Hong Kong... Art and Deterritorialization / Frank Vigneron
Hong Kong : Chinese University Press, 2010
376p. ; 24cm.
978-962-996-431-3
$ 60.00

China has become an increasingly dynamic center for contemporary art, and its various art scenes have been covered extensively by both academic and general art publications. Until now the vast issue of contemporary Chinese art has remained unexplored by localized analysis within a specific Chinese cultural sphere. In this text, Frank Vigneron focuses his analysis on Hong Kong, which is an ideal candidate due to its complex historical and cultural background that distinguishes it from any vague notion of "Chinese national culture." Rather than present a generalized overview of "Hong Kong art," Vigneron instead focuses on and contextualizes the works of about eighty artists working in and around Hong Kong while offering his personal reflections on this burgeoning aspect of Chinese culture
