Mongolia covers a range of habitats: not only steppe grassland, but also mountains, forests, deserts and lakes. Due to this and its geography it contains a very diverse assemblage of animals and plants, with species from both Asia and Europe represented.
Very little is known about some Mongolian mammal species, and as more become threatened it is important to increase knowledge in an effort to conserve them.

Bangladesh, generally characterized as a country of six seasons, possesses favorable climatic conditions for agricultural production and creates an approving condition for human habitation. The weather conditions of the country also show extremes and contrasts ranging from floods to drought conditions, from foggy cold weather conditions to high temperatures, from large scale cyclonic events to local level calm microclimatic situations.

The book, in this content, presents an assessment of temperature and rainfall data by adopting a retrospective approach aiming to determine their subtle properties. The work also intends to identify if there is any change in the climate of Bangladesh.
