It is an acknowledged fact that the free flow of ideas and the capacity to shine a powerful light of accountability on Government and Business is the foundation of sustainable social and economic development. In addition, the ability of a people to take charge of their own stories and narratives is also critical in promoting values and the consensus needed to build a shared identity which is necessary for nation building.

"No show boating, no self-announcement. It was one hell of a decent program in an age of indecent politics in Nigeria!" - Dapo Olorunyomi, Founder and Publisher of Premium Times

"The Program drew both subject and viewer in enough to drop their guard and thus get to the kernel of the truth!" - Yusuf Tuggar, Nigeria's Ambassador to Germany

The TV program 'Straight Talk with Kadaria' (STWK) was born out of a need to firmly establish a strong national and international voice from our very own journalistic talent pool and uniquely Nigerian viewpoint.

50 Voices captures the often loud and feisty essence of STWK which ran from 2014 to 2015 and was broadcast around the world on multiple channels.

We hope you enjoy the quintessentially Nigerian insights from these varied and very authentic voices.

In Malaysia, the advent of digital communication or better known as the new media has been discussed mainly from its potential as a democratizing force that frees information from authorities, and provides access to new viewpoints. Specifically, the development of Internet in Malaysia have mostly been framed within the discourse of challenging the dominance of the government control of the media. The emergence of online and independent media in particular has reshaped the news media and political communication and transform the media discourse into a more broadly-based public debate. In a bigger context, the impact of new media to the Malaysian society goes beyond political sphere. For a multi-ethnic society in Malaysia, the new communication technology particularly social media could help to create social solidarity between one another.

This book will help readers to understand how the new media is understood based on their impact on the society. It also will give reader useful information especially as an interface between undergraduate and postgraduate studies as well as for those who would like to comprehend the scenario of new media usage, adoption and impact in the Malaysian society.
