The first major account of terminal lucidity- the remarkable return of clarity and cognition at the end of life.

Terminal lucidity is a relatively common but poorly understood phenomenon. Near the end of life, many people - including those who have suffered brain injuries or strokes, or have been silenced by mental illness or deep dementia - experience what seems a miraculous return. They regain their clarity and energy, are able to talk with families and caregivers, recall their lives and often appear to be aware of their nearing death.

In this remarkable book, cognitive scientist and director of the Viktor Frankl Institute Dr Alexander Batthyany offers the first major account of terminal lucidity, utilising hundreds of case studies and his research in the related field of near-death studies to explore the mind, the body, the nature of consciousness, and what the living can learn from those who are crossing the border from life to death.

Astonishing, authoritative, and deeply moving, Threshold opens a doorway into one of life's - and death's - most provocative mysteries.

The author wrote Volume 3 as a mode of discerning the incompetent hospital leaders and consultants who erred by omission in promoting rapport between trainees and mentors, and who failed to impose discipline to bully physicians. Volume 3 empowers the demoralized and dejected clerks, interns, and residents to assert their rights against hospital bullies and incompetent leaders inside the training system, and to give them hope and inspiration as they ascend from clerkship to consultancy. Volume 3 was not written to bully the hospital bullies, otherwise it will defeat the author's genuine purpose of reforming the present status of Philippine medical education.

In a patriarchal society like South Africa, men are frequently portrayed as strong, invincible and powerful. However, high rates of male-driven violence suggest that men may be struggling with negative emotions. Chronic absence of fathers brought on by migrant labour practices, substance abuse and unemployment, among others, cause some men to resort to violence as a coping mechanism. In this book the author, a clinical psychologist, reflects on her psychotherapy experiences with male clients as she debunks the myth of male alexithymia, the inability to recognise and express emotions. Men are apparently disengaged from wellness practices as they are perceived to be reluctant to seek mental health care.

An ubuntu-inspired personhood discourse of trust, empathy and transformation theoretically underpins the author's clinical practice. Men's group participants risk being vulnerable as they support each other's suffering during story telling of abuse, loss and abandonment.

The integration of the culturally familiar philosophy of ubuntu challenges the hegemony of strictly modern Western psychological discourses and theories. The latter have not always been uncritically accepted in the African context, even though she, like most of her mental health colleagues, largely draws on Euro-American psychological theories and practices. Although the book is not a manual for how to do therapy with men, neither a panacea for all male related challenges, it can ignite empathic insights and kindle gender sensitive responses to male concerns, locally and internationally.

Women, who are frequently the targets of gender-based violence primarily committed by men, may play a significant role in the rehabilitation and healing of men. Men are usually excluded from psychosocial interventions, but this book makes the case that prioritising the wellbeing of boys and men is critical to creating a society that is safe for everyone—men, women, children, and the broader public.

South Africa's High-Stress Security Environment: Keys to Coping / Gerhard

This book delves into methods for coping with stress in a high-stress security environment. The causes and consequences of stress are explored, followed by a comprehensive discussion of coping strategies that can be used by security personnel.

A scientifically tested model for coping with stress in a high-stress security environment is presented, indicating the relationship between personality and coping. This is potentially ground-breaking since it explores the relationship between personality and coping in an innovative way. The model provides a simplified visual presentation of the coping process and the flow between stressors, personality, coping strategies, the positive outcomes of coping effectively and the negative consequences of not coping.

Both the coping strategies, and the discussion on personality, are applicable to any person working within a stressful environment.

The areas of stress and coping in the security environment have not previously been researched in this manner, and this book fills a gap in the theoretical and practical arena of coping in high-stress environments, providing a workable model that can be used in industry.
